There has always been more or less discussion among the members of the general Greek-letter fraternities as to the advisability of prohibiting men from belonging to the several Professional Fraternities. Theoretically, the opponents of such dual membership are correct. Practically, such a prohibition would work many distinct hardships. Were the various professional schools of the different universities so located that the professional students would always be available as material for the general fraternities, such a rule would be desirable. Many of the large universities of the country, however have their professional colleges at some distance from the academic and scientific schools, so that there is little, if any, association among the students. Take three of the larger universities of the West, for instance. The University of Illinois has three of its professional colleges in Chicago, its department of Medicine, Dentistry and Pharmacy. The other colleges and schools are in Urbana, one hundred and twenty-five miles away. The result is that the men in the professional colleges in Chicago do not...
