Between him and the writer there was a substantial agreement on all the great issues of the civil war and especially on the subjects treated in the address, which were often and, anxiously discussed, during the last year of his life. A thoughtful man, but never in haste to speak, lie incessantly pondered in his heart the great issues of the terrible conflict, and though sorrowful always, and at times desponding, he never faltered in stern loyalty to his government, nor to his race; or in fealty to his Saviour. Of ample fortune, yet despising the social consideration which men are too apt to claim on that ground alone, he was, to the last, the friend and intimate companion of the poorest of men. Making no pretension to...
